GOLDBERG, SECOND DISTINGUISHED JEW FOR U. S. CABINET, SON OF POOR IMMIGRANTS, IS PLEDGED TO LABOR-MANAGEMENT PEACE

For thirty years Arthur Joseph Goldberg, an intense, articulate, and persuasive labor lawyer, has devoted his talents to finding solutions for the disputes that divide labor and management and labor and labor. In that period he has become known as a skilled negotiator, a high-speed formulator of ideas, strategy, and tactics and probably the labor movement's only authentic philosopher, says the New York Times. He can be expected to put all these abilities to work in his new job as Secretary of Labor, to which he was appointed by U.S. President-elect John F. Kennedy.

Mr. Goldberg, a lean, curly-haired man, fifty-two years old, is best-known as the general counsel for the United Steelworkers of America. The $25,000 salary he will receive in his new post is estimated at less than one-quarter the annual income he has received from his legal practice.

Mr. Goldberg was born in Chicago on August 8, 1908, the son of poor Jewish immigrant parents. He attended public schools and Northwestern University Law School. When he was graduated at the age of twenty, with highest honors, he was too young to take the bar examination, but received a special dispensation.

He started out in general law practice in Chicago and slowly worked into the field of labor law. In 1948 the late Philip Murray, then head of the C.I.O., made him general counsel of both the C.I.O. and the steel union.

Mr. Goldberg's wife, the former Miss Dorothy Kurgans, is a painter of the abstractionist school. Their comfortable brick home, on the outskirts of Washington, and Mr. Goldberg's office are hung with her work. There are two Goldberg children, Miss Barbara Goldberg, a Chicago social worker; and Robert, a sophomore at Amherst College.

In 1955, Mr. Goldberg fashioned the merger formula for the American Federation of Labor and Congress of Industrial Organizations. Similarly he conceived labor's revolutionary Code of Ethical Standards governing the conduct of union officials and the machinery and procedures that ousted the International Brotherhood of Teamsters and others from the A. F. L.-C. I. O.

There has been scarcely a labor dispute of any proportion or significance in recent years in which Mr. Goldberg has not had a role. He helped to iron out New York's transit crisis in 1959. And only a few weeks ago he was called in to help find peace between New York's teachers and the Board of Education.

In Washington Mr. Goldberg has been both an official and unofficial liaison between Congressional leaders and the labor movement, says the New York Times. It was in this role that he came to know President-elect Kennedy whose formal statement of appointment follows:

"I take great pleasure in announcing that I am appointing Mr. Arthur J. Goldberg, one of the country's leading experts in the field of labor-management relations, as the Secretary of Labor in my Cabinet.

"Mr. Goldberg, a native of Chicago, has a singularly broad range of experience which befits him for this position of great responsibility. As an attorney, he has practiced extensively in Chicago and Washington in many phases of the law. As an officer in the United States Army during World War II, he made significant contributions to the United States intelligence activities in the European theatre of operations.

"In the post-war period, Mr. Goldberg has served as counsel for a number of leading trade unions. He is generally recognized as an architect of the merged labor movement in our country. In the pre-merger Congress of Industrial Organizations, of which he was general counsel, Mr. Goldberg devised the effective and successful procedures under which a dozen unions accused of Communist domination were expelled from the C. I. O. This step marked a major setback to Communist infiltration of American democratic institutions.

"In the A. F. L.-C. I. O., which he has served as special counsel, Mr. Goldberg laid special emphasis on the problems of ethical practices in the labor movement. He was one of the principal formulators of the Ethical Practices Codes of the A. F. L.-C. I. O., which stand as a splendid statement reaffirming the basic principles of honesty and integrity in the conduct of trade union affairs without hampering their legitimate activities in behalf of working men and women.

"As counsel of the A. F. L.-C. I. O. Ethical Practices Committee, Mr. Goldberg gave great assistance to President Meany of the A. F. L.-C. I. O. and to Chairman Al Hayes of the A. F. L.-C. I. O. Ethical Practices Committee in the effective and successful move to eliminate from the federation a number of unions accused of domination by corrupt leaders.

"An independent and creative thinker in the field of labor's relationships with management and with the national community, Mr. Goldberg has, on a number of occasions, suggested steps and methods to help the nation eliminate strife between labor and management.

"As a principal negotiator, working with both the late Philip Murray and Steelworkers' President David J. McDonald, Mr. Goldberg helped achieve notable successes for the principle and practice of collective bargaining. In all these efforts, Mr. Goldberg has won the respect and praise of leaders of labor, industry, the academic world and the public.

"In my own capacity as a member of the Congressional committees dealing with the problem of labor-management relations, I have had first-hand knowledge of Mr. Goldberg's intelligence, wisdom and intuition in this complex field. I have no hesitation in predicting that he will continue to hold the confidence and esteem of all sections of the public in the high post of Secretary of Labor."

Mr. Goldberg's response was: "I shall deem it a privilege to serve in Senator Kennedy's Administration as Secretary of Labor. Congress, in establishing the Department of Labor, declared the purpose to be to foster, promote and develop the welfare of the wage earners of the United States, to improve their working conditions and to advance their opportunities for profitable employment.

"In this high office of Secretary of Labor, I will attempt to implement these purposes, the task to which I look forward in the Administration of a President who is whole-heartedly dedicated to moving forward towards new frontiers of human progress. Virtually all Americans work for a living or seek to do so. In a very real sense, therefore, the Department of Labor is a department of and for all Americans. The welfare of wage-earners, their working conditions, and their opportunity for advancement and security are completely intertwined with the welfare of the entire country.

"One of the duties of the Secretary of Labor is to make recommendations to alleviate the effects of unemployment. But even more important to wage-earners and non-wage-earners alike will be the elimination of the causes of unemployment, an objective to which President-elect Kennedy has dedicated himself.

"I pledge co-operation with him and with all other departments of this Administration so that our free-enterprise economy and our free labor movement can work together in the task so well stated by Senator Kennedy of again moving America forward.

"Of particular concern to me, when I assume the post of Secretary of Labor, if I am confirmed, is the promotion of labor-management peace. This is an objective toward which I am whole-heartedly dedicated, for which I have worked in the past, and for which I will work unceasingly in the years ahead.

"We are fortunate that our President-elect has special competence and knowledge in the field of labor-management relations. As a private citizen, I supported his legislative program when he was Senator. As Secretary of Labor, I shall continue that support for him as President. As head of the Department of Labor, the Secretary is charged with the administration and enforcement of various laws. I wish to make it perfectly clear that if confirmed as Secretary of Labor, I shall do everything in my power to enforce these laws vigorously, fairly and without fear or favor, and in the spirit of humanity and common sense, which I believe should characterize all law enforcement."

In answer to a reporter's question he said: "I think, inevitably, we will have to come to a shorter work week in America, but right now our problem is not a shorter work week. Our problem, as Senator Kennedy correctly and properly stated to the convention of the Steelworkers Union, was to put our people back on a forty-hour week. At the present time they are working short hours with short pay, and I think our first task in America is to put our people back to work so that we can produce all that we need and all that the free world needs."

The physical task of transferring command of the department began at a Washington luncheon conference between the outgoing Secretary, James P. Mitchell, and the labor lawyer who will succeed him on January 20, says the New York Times. Mr. Mitchell offered Mr. Goldberg an office and a secretary to facilitate his preliminary discussions with departmental personnel.

Mr. Goldberg expressed admiration for the efficiency the agency had attained under Mr. Mitchell's direction, and made it plain he contemplated no basic administrative overhaul. He said he intended to spend much of his time at the

Noted Big Game Hunter Took Pictures In India, Africa

Saul Blickman, aged seventy-four years, a big game hunter and photographer, died at Mount Sinai Hospital, in New York a few weeks after suffering a heart attack. He lived at 115 Central Park West, says the New York Herald Tribune. Since his graduation from Cornell University in 1911, Mr. Blickman had been with S. Blickman, Inc., and later became president of the concern, which makes food service and hospital and laboratory equipment.

Mr. Blickman's chief hobby was big game hunting and photography of animals in Africa and India. In 1952, the master film from his second African safari was donated to the New York Zoological Society and was made into five color and sound motion pictures. They are: "Let's Look at Elephants," "Lions at Home," "Hippo," "Antelopes on the Plains of Africa," and "Africa — The Biggest Zoo."

On his second expedition to India in 1956, Mr. Blickman photographed tigers in their natural environment and also donated this film to the New York Zoological Society for a motion picture entitled, "Where the Tiger Prowls."

To obtain pictures of the tigers, Mr. Blickman designed a special cage to hold a photographer. The cage was camouflaged and set up at strategic points to photograph the tigers without disturbing them.

In addition to hunting and photography, Mr. Blickman made collections of rare snakes and gavials, members of the crocodile family, which also were donated to the

Ruhr City, With 71 Jews Left Of 3,000, Stages Exhibit Of Jewish Religious Art

An international exhibition of Jewish religious art has opened in the old Ruhr city of Recklinghausen, Germany, under the sponsorship of the West German federal and local Governments. Twelve Rembrandts, nine Chagalls, and a Rubens make up only a small part of the show.

It is housed in the three-story Municipal Art Museum, which is on the site of a former World War II bunker opposite the sooty railroad station, says the New York Times. Visitors have come from all over Germany, from Paris, London, and Haifa; from New York, Chicago, and Detroit.

The exhibition will run until January 15. November 3, the day it opened, was the day after the seventeenth anniversary of the worst day of extermination at the concentration camp at Riga, Latvia. The Nazis sent most of the Jews of the Recklinghausen area to that camp.

Mrs. Martha de Vries, one of the survivors of the Riga camp, pointed to the names crowded on the back of a tall stone. It had been dedicated on November 2, 1948. "My father, my mother, my sister," she said. Then, head held high, she went back to her home, which houses the new Recklinghausen synagogue in its attic, and served coffee and cakes to a group of women from Munster who had visited the exhibition.

The stories of the art show and the cemetery with its laboriously righted headstones are really one.

Before Hitler, Recklinghausen, Bochum and Herne — three of the smaller towns in the vast Ruhr complex — each had its own synagogue and traditions. The Recklinghausen cemetery had graves like that of Bertha Weinberg, with the year of death [illegible], barely legible on the moss-covered and weathered stone.

With the Nazis came the total disruption of the small community. The synagogues were destroyed and the headstones in the cemetery were uprooted. Only a memorial to the city's thirteen Jewish dead of World War I — listed alphabetically from Albert Adler to Walter Weis — remained standing.

"Only because it was too heavy," remarked Dr. Annalies Schroder, a Protestant, who is assistant director of the museum.

During the Nazi period many of Recklinghausen's non-Jewish residents did what they could to help the Jews. One was Thomas Grochowiak, a Roman Catholic coal miner, who has a son also named Thomas, says the New York Times. The younger Grochowiak, a self-taught painter, is now director of the art museum. He remembers the old Jew sheltered by his father; he remembers a Jewish dentist named Fishbein. The dentist had a way of making the boy laugh even in the act of pulling a tooth.

The museum opened in 1949. It holds a Ruhr arts festival every summer. A few years ago Herr Grochowiak conceived the idea of the Jewish art exhibition. "Nowadays a Jew is a rarity here," he said. "The young people do not know what a Jew is. I thought perhaps they should learn, and in a way that would make up for the old idea."

Through the Town Council, the idea was put before Dr. Theodor Heuss, who was then President of the West German Republic. Dr. Heuss approved, but as the scope

MARRIAGES

CONS-KANTER

The marriage of Miss Doreen Gwendolyn Kanter, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Samuel I. Kanter, of Saint John, N. B., to Bennie Juda Cons, son of Mr. and Mrs. Louis Cons, 5812 Wilderton Avenue, took place at Shaarei Zedek Synagogue, in Saint John, on November 27, at half-past five o'clock, Cantor B. Silberberg officiating. The bride was given in marriage by her parents. She was gowned in duchess satin and re-embroidered Alencon lace, fashioned with a portrait neckline outlined with the lace and trimmed with seed-pearl-beads and sequins; a fitted bodice, with long, tapering sleeves; and a bouffant skirt which fell into deep folds and extended into a chapel train. Her shoulder-length veil of tulle illusion was draped to a tiara trimmed with seed-pearl-beads and sequins. She carried a white and gold prayer book with cluster bouquet of white Butterfly roses and stephanotis tied with streamers of white satin. Miss Faye Kashetsky, of Chicago, Ill., was maid of honour, wearing a gown of emerald-green satin, made with a moulded bodice; portrait neckline; and bouffant skirt with floating panel in the back trimmed with self-material roses. Her head-dress was a cabbage rose with a veil; and she carried a cascade bouquet of bronze-coloured chrysanthemums. Misses Sharon Budovitch, of Fredericton, N. B., cousin of the bride; and Fern Rubin, cousin of the groom, were bridesmaids. Each wore a gown of emerald-green satin cut with a broad neckline; and bouffant skirt. They had beaded tiaras and carried clusters of gold and bronze coloured chrysanthemums, what and coloured leaves tied with green ribbons. Lynn Steinberg, cousin of the bride, was flower girl. She wore a Nile-green nylon dress flecked with white; and a headband of white ribbon. She carried a wicker gathering basket filled with tiny yellow chrysanthemums, and tied with yellow ribbons on the handle. Harvey Kugelmass, uncle of the groom, was best man. The ushers were: Dr. B. H. Kanter, and Dr. Yale C. Kanter, of Cleveland, Ohio, brothers of the bride; H. Swetsky, and I. Kashentsky, cousins of the bride; Ben Cohen, and Samuel Cohen. Allan Mark Miebelson, cousin of the bride, was page boy. The Synagogue was decorated with tall standards of bronze and gold-coloured chrysanthemums. Mrs. Kanter, mother of the bride, wore a gown of yellow brocade, with a moulded bodice; with bracelet-length sleeves; a scooped neckline; and sheath skirt with a draped overskirt. Her hat was of beige petals; and her flowers were a corsage of gold-tinted roses. Mrs. Cons, mother of the groom, was in a beige brocaded gown which had a moulded bodice; portrait neckline; elbow-length sleeves; a skirt draped in front. Her hat was of beige tulle; and her corsage was of orange-coloured Delight roses. A reception was held at the Admiral Beatty Hotel. Mr. and Mrs. Bennie Juda Cons spent their wedding trip in New York, the bride travelling in a mint-green knitted suit and jacket; with a beige hat; and had a corsage of baby white roses. They have taken up residence at 4865 Bourret Avenue. Present at the marriage from Montreal were: his parents; Mrs. M. J. Laxer, 4875 Draper Avenue; Mr. and Mrs. Harvey Kugelmass, 5714 McAlear Avenue; Mrs. H. Fleming, 6954 Querbes Avenue; Mrs. Rose Welser, 3775 Brighton Avenue; Dr. and Mrs. D. GOLDBERG, SECOND DISTINGUISHED JEW FOR U. S. CABINET department between now and Inauguration Day.

The new Secretary has been in touch through personal visits, telephone or telegraph with most of the key members of Congress with whom he will have to deal on legislative matters. Included in the list is "my old friend," Senator Barry M. Goldwater, Arizona Republican, a chief spokesman for the conservative forces on Capitol Hill.

Mr. Goldberg has also been busy severing his long-standing ties with organized labor and his law firms in Chicago and Washington.

In resigning as a union counsel and policy-maker, he has emphasized that he intends his withdrawal to be permanent so that he may be "completely free and independent" in his new assignment.

President-elect John F. Kennedy is expected to set up a permanent White House council of labor-management advisers to foster industrial peace and national economic growth.

The prospect of such a move was enhanced by the designation of Arthur J. Goldberg as Secretary of Labor. He is a strong advocate of a council that would recommend "bold and imaginative programs" to deal with such problems as automation, foreign automation, foreign competition, inflation, unemployment and industrial strife.

Under the Goldberg plan, the advisory panel would be made up of top-level representatives of business, unions and the public, says the New York Times. It would not intervene directly in collective bargaining, but it would exercise a fact-finding role in seeking to prevent strikes in vital industries.

Top unionists predicted that Mr. Goldberg's appointment would lead to new co-operation by labor and the Government in measures to guarantee the ouster of corrupt elements from union ranks.

In his new post, Mr. Goldberg is expected to encourage his former associates to recapture their original zeal for weeding out corruption with a minimum of Government help. He has always made clear his belief that labor can do the job most effectively by accepting the primary responsibility itself.

Much of the undercover opposition to the Goldberg nomination during the two weeks that it was under consideration by Senator Kennedy came from unions that still maintain friendly ties with the exiled Teamsters. However, a more fundamental source of opposition was the unresolved conflict between the craft unions of the old A. F. L. and the industrial unions of the C. I. O.

Some craft leaders objected to Mr. Goldberg on the ground that he had been counsel to the C. I. O. before the merger in 1955 and that most of his ties were with the mass-production unions. His supporters, who included some key A. F. L. chiefs, says the New York Times, noted that he had played a major part in effecting the merger and in seeking to promote more unity within the pooled federation.

On the highest level, in cases of national emergency, the Secretary of Labor may play a major role if he is in fact as well as title the President's chief labor adviser.

Mr. Goldberg will face problems that have already been delineated by a clutch of advisory commissions and boards: nagging unemployment, the threat (and promise) of automation, job discrimination, and "depressed areas."

Persons who are approaching retirement can make that period of leisure more healthy physically and mentally if they plan substitute occupations for the old job. For ten years preceding retirement it is a good idea to experiment with hobbies.

The good resolutions, usually left until December 31, should be made now and tried out so that they are in working order by the New Year. A medical check-up, dental repairs, and a thorough examination of the eyes are in order. Eating balanced meals will help to complete your good health resolution list.

If an epileptic has a seizure, the passerby can help him by placing a pencil between the patient's teeth to prevent biting of the tongue. No stimulants should be given and, if the spot is safe, the patient need not be moved until the seizure is over, then he can be lifted. He will probably fall into a heavy sleep.

CLASS IN COOKERY

two-thirds cup oil
two eggs
one teaspoon baking powder
one cup boiled water
one teaspoon vanilla
pinch of ginger
one cup brown sugar
two and one-half cups flour
one teaspoon baking soda
one cup raisins
six ounces mixed peel
six squares Turkish Delight

Bring water to a boil, add raisins and baking soda, and set aside to cool. Cream sugar and eggs. Add oil and cooled raisin mixture, mixing well. Add the flour and baking powder which have been sifted together twice. Add vanilla and ginger. Add mixed peel. Pour batter into a slightly greased, nine-by-eleven-inch baking-dish. Sprinkle with cut up Turkish Delight. Bake at 350 degrees for one hour.

Mrs. E. Meyer,
207 Bloomfield Avenue, Montreal.

PEANUT COOKIES

one egg, slightly beaten
one cup brown sugar
three-quarters cup melted butter one and one-quarter cups cake flour one-half teaspoon baking soda one-half teaspoon baking powder
one-quarter teaspoon salt
one and one-half cups oatmeal one-half cup corn flakes three-quarters cup peanuts

Beat egg slightly, add brown sugar and melted butter. Sift dry ingredients together into a separate bowl and add oatmeal, crushed corn flakes, and chopped nuts. Add contents of this bowl to the creamed mixture, stirring well. Drop by spoonful onto a buttered cookie sheet and bake for ten minutes at 400 degrees.

Mrs. F. Rosenberg,
1292 St. Clair Avenue, Toronto.

WILKS-LIEBMAN

The marriage of Miss Gail Liebman, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Benjamin Liebman, 48 Glenarden Road, to Gerald Wilks, son of Mr. and Mrs. Harry Wilks, 748 Woburn Avenue, was solemnized on Monday, September 5, at half-past five o'clock, at Beth Tzedec Synagogue, by Rabbi Stuart Rosenberg, assisted by Cantor Joseph Cooper. The bride was given in marriage by her father. Her long gown of white satin peau de sole was fashioned with an Empire bodice, appliqued with Alencon lace and beaded with seed-pearl-beads; a scooped neckline; long, pointed sleeves; and a bouffant skirt, appliqued with Alencon lace, which extended to a chapel train. Her waist-length veil was caught to a crown of rhinestones; and she carried a cascade of mauve orchids, white stephanotis, and ivy. Miss Heather Wilks, sister of the groom, was the maid of honour, wearing a pale mauve chiffon gown, cut with a scooped neckline; and a bouffant skirt. She had a tiara of seed-pearl-beads, and carried a semi-cascade of pink and mauve roses. Eleanor Liebman, sister of the bride, was the junior maid of honour. She wore a pale mauve satin sheath, with a white organza overskirt; a scooped neck line; embroidered bodice; and a mauve cummerbund; also a white and mauve headband; and carried a semi-cascade of pink and mauve roses. Harry Binder, uncle of the groom, was best man. The ushers were: Samuel Bender, and Mac Clement, uncles of the groom; Saul Bensky, Benjamin Goldman, Allan Langer, Edward Liebman, brother of the bride; Irving Tepperman, Wally Klaiman, and Larry Bender, cousin of the groom. Stephen Bander, cousin of the groom, was the page boy. A dinner followed at the synagogue at which four hundred guests were received. Mrs. Liebman, mother of the bride, wore a white, beaded, peau de sole Empire gown, with a scooped neckline; and cap sleeves; with a matching white headband; and had a wrist bouquet of white and mauve orchids. Mrs. Wilks, mother of the groom, wore a mauve peau de soie gown which had a matching overskirt; a scooped neckline, trimmed with beading; an Empire bodice; and cap sleeves. She had a mauve feather headband; and a corsage of white and mauve orchids. Mr. and Mrs. Gerald Wilks spent their wedding trip at Kiamesha Lake, N.Y. The bride departed in a beige and white knitted suit, with a white beret. They will reside at 110 Lyons Avenue. Here for the wedding were: Mr. and Mrs. Benjamin Wagner, and Samuel and Gloria; and Mr. and Mrs. Isadore Waxner, and Gail; all of Brooklyn, N. Y.

WALDMAN-BERNSTEIN

The marriage of Miss Billie Bernstein, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. David Bernstein, 1626 Dufferin Street, to Morris Waldman, son of Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Waldman, 296 Queen Street, was solemnized on Sunday, November 20, at five o'clock, at Murray House, by Rabbi David Monson. The bride was given in marriage by her parents. She wore a gown of ivory-coloured peau de soie. It had an Empire bodice of lace; with a heart-shaped neckline; and long sleeves; and a bouffant skirt which extended to a chapel train. Her waist-length veil was caught to a tiara of seed-pearl beads, rhinestones, and lace; and she carried a white prayer book with two white orchids and stephanotis. Misses Phyllis Bernstein, sister of the bride, and Priscilla Waldman, sister of the groom, were maids of honour. Miss Bernstein, wore a sleeveless gown of plum-coloured peau de soie, with a bouffant skirt; Empire bodice; scooped neckline; and flowers appliqued around the waistline. Miss Waldman wore a long-sleeved gown of plum-coloured peau de soie, with a bouffant skirt; scooped neckline; and Empire bodice. Each had a tiara of sequins and seed-pearl-beads, and carried a cascade of white carnations and pink roses. The bridesmaids were: Misses Eleanor Bergman, cousin of the groom; Anita Minegarten, cousin of the bride; and Eleanor Goodman. Their gowns were identical with that of Miss Waldman. Marsha Bond, cousin of the bride, was the junior bridesmaid. She wore a gown of pink chiffon, with a scooped neckline; bouffant skirt; and three-quarter-length sleeves; also a tiara of seed-pearl-beads; and carried mauve and white roses. Brenda Wallace, cousin of the bride, was the flower girl. She wore a blue organdy dress; and had a headband of white roses; and carried a nosegay of pink and white roses. Morris Waltman, cousin of the groom, was the best man. The ushers were: Morton Meyers and Joseph Posner, cousins of the groom; Larry Haitman, and Marvin Goodman. Paul Bernstein, cousin of the bride, was the junior usher. Ira David Bond, cousin of the bride, was the page boy. The wedding music was played. A dinner followed at the synagogue. Mrs. Bernstein, mother of the bride, wore a beige lace sheath, which had an Empire bodice, trimmed with beige chiffon; short sleeves; a V-neckline; and a floating panel; also a matching headband; and her flowers were a mauve orchid corsage. Mrs. Waldman, mother of the groom, wore a lilac-coloured sheath of peau de soie, with a scooped neckline; and short sleeves; also a matching headband; and a similar corsage. Mr. and Mrs. Morrie Waldman spent their wedding trip in Miami Beach, Florida. The bride travelled in a green wool suit, with a black fox collar; with a bronze-coloured orchid corsage. They will reside at 839 Roselawn Avenue. Here for the wedding were: Mr. and Mrs. Sol Mendel, of Belleville, Ont.

TORONTO MEETINGS

● NER ISRAEL ●

Yeshiva College Women's Auxiliary has been organized. At a meeting, at the home of Myer Lebovic, 16 Strathearn Road, chairman of the board of directors of the Hebrew high school, and Mrs. Lebovic, elected: Mesdames Jack Blitz, president; Herschel Rubenstein and Myer Lebovic, vice-presidents; Sidney Goldstein, treasurer; L. Korzen, secretary. Chairmen are: Mesdames Solomon Weits, A. Gryfe, M. Gottlieb, and Nathan Weisblatt. Rabbi Manning H. Bleich, administrator of Ner Israel of Toronto, was the guest speaker. He said that the plan for the Auxiliary is to include assistance to the school, for the students, and the support of its high school programme. A meeting of the board of directors was held in the library of the College, 525 Finch Avenue West. Myer Lebovic presided. Herschel Rubenstein, president, submitted a programme calling for the building of a new wing, before the new term in September; and in order to admit a new class, it is necessary to add a laboratory, a library and four classrooms. The school admits into its tenth grade, graduates from other Jewish educational institutions in Toronto. Reports were given by Rabbi Bleich, administrative head of the school; and Rabbi Sholom Gold, principal. Mrs. Jack Blitz, president of the Women's Auxiliary; Harry Botnick, Meyer Gaener, Dr. Julius Kuhl, Joseph Levine, Saul Sigler, Samuel Wortsman, were present. A meeting was held at the home of Mrs. Harry Botnick, 339 Hillhurst Boulevard.

● TORONTO SYMPHONY ●

Orchestra Women's Committee Junior Auxiliary: Erica Goodman, twelve-year-old harpist, daughter of the concertmaster, Hyman Goodman and Mrs. Goodman; and fifteen-year-old pianist, Jack Krichaf took part in a children's concert, at Massey Hall. Eric House was host to the children, convened by Mrs. Lawrence Brenzel, and assisted by Mesdames John Polanyi, Ralph Winters, Lawrence Phelan, Barney J. Danson, David Turney and Howard Heintzman.

● PIONEER WOMEN ●

Galila Club meeting at the home of Mrs. M. Zamikoff, 54 Stormount Avenue, saw Mrs. S. Elnatoss preside. A report on the Chanukah party was given by Mrs. J. Nightingale. The guest speaker was Allan Borovoy, executive secretary for Toronto and district, of the Labour Commission for Human Rights; on "Racial Discrimination". Mrs. S. Silverberg, cultural chairman, introduced and thanked the speaker. The card night will be held on January 18, at 14 Viewmount Avenue; convener, Mrs. S. Silverberg.

● LADIES OZROWER SOCIETY

entertained thirty guests, at the Murray House, in honour of Miss Ruth Bocalter, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. H. Bocalter, 43 Overbrook Place, and the fiances of Dr. Edward Beder, son of Mr. and Mrs. D. Beder, 1350 Dundas Street West. Miss Ruth Bocalter, the honouree, wore a beige, wool jersey ensemble. She had a corsage of Taliaman roses. Seated at the head-table were: Mrs. Beder, mother of the groom-to-be; Mrs. Bocalter, mother of the bride-to-be; Mrs. Ann Lerner, 89 McCaul Street, grandmother of the groom-to-be; Miss Ruth Bocalter, the honouree; Mrs. I. Golosky, president; Mrs. B. Goldstein, vice-president; and Mrs. P. Beder, cousin of the groom-to-be. Charity tea, at the home of Mrs. I. Feldman, 72 Wenderley Drive, was convened by Mrs. N. Rotman and Mrs. I. Golosky, president. Assistants were: Mesdames J. Burstyn, L. Chapnick, D. Beder, S. Hoffman, I. Feldman. Those who poured the tea were: Mesdames I. Golosky, B. Goldstein, M. Feldman, B. Kupsov.

● HAPOEL HAMIZRACHI ●

Why They Stay In Israel

BY TEMMA LEVIN

The door opened a crack in response to my knock, and a slight dark figure stood silhouetted against the light. She looked at me narrowly. "Yes?"

"Krauthammer live here? Shoshanna?"

Suddenly she recognized me and the door flew open. "Mon dieu!" she exclaimed.

"Ima! Mi zeh?" (Mummy! Who is it?), a child's voice cried from an inner room.

"Now, you go back to sleep," said Shoshanna over her shoulder. And turning to me again, "Oh, what a pity Zvi's not home."

I could scarcely recognize her. Though she was not yet out of her twenties, her face was drawn and yellowish, and her petite figure seemed even wispier than I had remembered. "What's happened? You look like you've just been let out of prison."

The young Frenchwoman laughed. The last time I had seen her, five years ago, she had indeed been in prison — doing social work at the Masyahu Camp for delinquents.

"I'm just getting over a siege of jaundice. But I'm all right now. Wait — let me put on some coffee."

"Are you back at work?" I asked when she returned a few minutes later. "Still with the Prison Service?"

"No, I'm working with Youth Aliyah now."

"Well, tell me about your job — tell me about yourself and Zvi. What's he doing?"

"Since you last saw him he's taken courses in Public Administration, and is now with the Jewish Agency."

"Progress!"

"If you want to know what progress is in Israel," said Shoshanna chuckling, "Zvi's just bought a second-hand scooter from someone who has just bought a second-hand car. Everyone's coming up in the world!"

Over coffee we reminisced about old times. Shoshanna, a graduate of the Paris School of Social Work, had come to Israel not out of Zionist zeal (she had once confessed) but because she was young, curious about what was going on here in the field of social work, and hopeful of getting some experience working in a children's village. Her first problem on arrival, she had discovered, was lack of any knowledge of Hebrew; so she had enrolled in the newly-opened Kibbutz Ulpan at Maale Ha-Hamisha where she had met Zvi, one of her fellow students, and had married him.

Assisted by a small loan from the Jewish Agency, the young couple had come to live with us at the first Hostel for Western Professionals in Tel Aviv, of which my wife Tova was the first Menahelet (in free English Directorkeh). Soon thereafter Shoshanna accepted a job with the Prison Service.

Masyahu Camp was a new kind of institution for Israel. The Commissioner of Prisons, a former social worker and at that time also fairly new at his job, saw the problem of juvenile delinquency as one of rehabilitation. The approach to the prisoner at Masyahu was therefore a friendly and human one. Police officers did not carry weapons; the young prisoners were taught trades and went out to work, without guards, in the Police Department's carpentry and machine shops in nearby Ramle; they were also free to buy things for themselves in town.

"At the time I went to work at Masyahu," Shoshanna recalled, "we were only four social workers in the entire Prison Service. The public thought it very odd for young women to be working in the prisons; they were opposed to 'coddling the law-breakers.' Now the Service has some twenty-five social workers, and most people who know anything at all about the Service, feel that these workers are doing a very necessary job. Even the prison wardens, who were most skeptical five years ago about the work we were doing, have now come to accept the broad principles of rehabilitation. And that," she added with satisfaction, "is what I call real progress."

"But you left the Prison Service?"

"Yes — I took time out to have a baby." Her black eyes sparkled with amusement. "C'est la vie! After that I came to Jerusalem and went to work in the Talbieh Mental Hospital. At Youth Aliyah my work now is with disturbed adolescents — mostly immigrant children without families."

"Tell me, how do the problem children you deal with at present differ from those you worked with five years ago? As I remember, then you also dealt with youths who had gotten into trouble because they were without family."

"True. We had some youngsters at Masyahu who had been brought over by Youth Aliyah from North Africa and been placed in Kibbutzim. Rebellious and unused to discipline, they hadn't adjusted well to collective life. And so they had drifted off to the cities, where, unable to earn a living, they had soon come into conflict with the law.

"The Youth Aliyah wards I deal with now — about fifty of them — are emotionally disturbed adolescents, both boys and girls. They too can't fit into a Kibbutz or boarding school pattern. But each of them is a special problem, usually because of the vast differences in their psychological makeup and cultural background. Today we look after Hungarian, Polish, and Rumanian adolescents in addition to those from the Oriental communities.

"The source of their emotional disturbance? — Broken homes, abandonment, separation from family, etc. We even had the case of a boy who didn't know who his parents were, he had come here so long ago. These poor children feel unwanted. And the problem of integration into a new environment, though not the prime cause of their maladjustment, doesn't help their condition either. Wherever possible we place them with foster families, arrange vocational training for them, try to find them jobs. If they get into trouble with the law, we work with the probation officers involved, etc., etc."

"Do you ever run across your former prisoners from Masyahu?"

"Yes, I met one in Tel Aviv just the other day. He's married now, has two children, and a steady job. He's a carpenter. The interesting thing is, he learned this trade while in prison. But make no mistake. Not all delinquents are so easily rehabilitated. There are others who go back to prison again and again, because of unemployment, because of poor social conditions. Living in miserable slums, without any ideals to give their lives meaning, these youngsters find it terribly difficult to break out of this pattern. They feel lost when they are alone."

Her dark eyes clouded as she spoke of the loneliness of these adolescents, some of them obviously not much younger than herself.

I could not help asking:

"Don't you find the work depressing?"

She looked up at me, startled. "No, not really." Then she laughed. "True, I do occasionally 'worry' Zvi about some of the difficult cases. But a social worker has to retain her objectivity, you know, and not allow herself to become too emotionally involved with any of her cases."

Suddenly a door creaked, and a barefoot, freckled little girl in pajamas stumbled into the room, rubbing her eyes sleepily and blinking at the light. "Ima, mi zeh?" she said, looking at me suspiciously, then burying her head in her mother's lap.

Shoshanna swooped her up in her arms and kissed her. "Alona, I told you to go to sleep!" she said, in an unsuccessful attempt at severity.

We talked a bit about the problems of the working mother in Israel. Alona, who is four, attends nursery school in the morning, and is looked after by a neighbor with a child of Alona's age, until Shoshanna returns from work in the late afternoon. "Thus far, the child seems remarkably free of psychological problems," said the mother.

When the conversation got back on the rails again, I said to Shoshanna, "Do you find social work in Israel as difficult as you did five years ago? Last time, you know, you felt that social services in many parts of the country were rather disorganized and uncoordinated, a situation which gave the newcomer a feeling of frustration in the face of Israel's tremendous needs."

Suddenly Alona raised her head. "Ima, my tummy is itchy!"

Ima gently rubbed the child's tummy and resumed. "Speaking of my own work, I would say we don't always get the cooperation we urgently need from various agencies. From the Ministry of Social Welfare, and from the municipality, for example." She shrugged. "They claim lack of budget, lack of staff."

She paused and resumed:

"Speaking in more general terms, however, there is no question but that the level of social work in Israel has risen with our increased experience and training. Two years ago I returned to France to visit my family. I was amazed to see how far behind us they are, as far as social work standards are concerned — case work over there is still quite new.

"But we have many more problems than they, some serious, like the constantly changing character of our immigration; some trivial, like the lack of transport — you kill endless hours trying to get to out-of-the-way places."

Rocking the child in her lap, she added quietly, "I was happy to go back to France. But I was even happier to return to Israel, despite all the difficulties here. This is my home. Even more important, this is my child's home. That is why I stay."

Jamaican Jewry Celebrates Double Event

The 1,400 Jews in Jamaica, British West Indies, are celebrating a double event: the 75th anniversary of the founding of their synagogue, and the 25th year of the ministry of Rabbi Henry Phillips Silverman. Praise for Jamaican Jewry's devotion to Jewish ideals was contained in a message sent to the community by Samuel Bronfman, of Montreal, chairman of the North American Division of the World Jewish Congress, to the president of the United Congregation of Israelites in Kingston, Jamaica, and to Rabbi Silverman.

The synagogue, with its school for 80 pupils, is the central institution of the 300-year old community. Mr. Bronfman expressed the hope that the community would enjoy many more years of "progress in peace and prosperity."

Dr. Maurice L. Perlzweig, director of the World Jewish Congress International Affairs Department, recently visited the community to discuss current Jewish issues. A message from Dr. Perlzweig praised Jamaican Jewry for its "devotion to Jewish ideals and contribution to good citizenship under the leadership of a Minister whose dedication, scholarship, and integrity are an honor to the Jewish name."

Little Things That Matter

BY RABBI JACK D. SPIRO, OF THE LIBERAL JEWISH SYNAGOGUE, ST. LONDON, ENGLAND, IN THE LIBERAL JEWISH MONTHLY

There are many little things that should be important to us, and yet we frequently overlook them. The world of finance would fall apart if small details were not handled properly. Every businessman knows that.

But when it comes to religion, details frequently seem trivial to many of us. An example of this might be our attitude toward the Torah. We consider it to be the very foundation of Judaism, mainly because this is what we have been taught to believe. Yet so much of it appears to be nothing but a vast web of trivial details.

Consider Exodus 25: 1-9, 21-22. It describes in the most intricate detail the offerings brought for the construction of the Tabernacle. The same is true of the Haftarah: (I Kings 6:1-13) all the details are given for building the Temple in Jerusalem. The complex of laws and directions appears to be meaningless rubbish. What do all these details have to do with seeking justice and clean hearts or loving our neighbours as we love ourselves? Of what import are the minute details when we have broad ethical principles by which to live?

I must confess that I was ruthlessly critical of such passages in the Bible and Talmud and elsewhere — critical, that is, until an unforgettable experience happened to me during my matriculation at the Hebrew Union College. It was Leo Baeck's last year with the students of the College — the last year of a gleaming light that brightened every class room, every dormitory room, every heart and mind. The students tried as often as possible to listen to Dr. Baeck. They vied for the opportunity to sit at the table with him in the dining hall. He was truly a teacher among teachers.

I remember one specific evening during dinner when several of us were discussing the relative merits and demerits of pouring unceasing energy and time into preparing for rabbinic ordination. What was the purpose of learning long passages of Hebrew, of memorising long lists of vocabulary, of studying the smallest details in Jewish antiquity? The discussion continued and then, at the first moment of silence, Dr. Baeck said softly: "The detail is also divine".

It is extremely easy to become so concerned with broad principles and neat systems of philosophy that we forget about the details. There are those who lose sight of the forest because of the trees. And there are those who lose sight of the trees because of the forest. A great principle is presented in our Torah portion of today in these words: "Let them make me a sanctuary that I may dwell among them".

This verse tells us that God abides within the House of Worship, that there is a relationship between the Almighty and those that call upon Him during the services in the synagogue. In other words, the synagogue is an important institution in the preservation of Judaism. Here is the principle. But there is more, Oh so much more, than a vague, general precept which hardly touches our lives.

There are the precise details — how to build that synagogue, what materials to use, what designs to install, what colours to paint the interior and exterior, the style of the furnishings. The finished product is indeed beautiful. But what of the nails, the mortar, the timber, the sweat, the gruelling days of hard labour that were all responsible for the beauty? What of the details, the little things that created the finished product?

The importance of the details, of the little things that really matter, can be seen in any segment of life that we examine. There is a story told of the time at a rehearsal when Arturo Toscanini suddenly stopped the huge NBC Orchestra during one of the most resounding passages in Beethoven's Ninth Symphony. He stopped the rehearsal to criticise a violinist in the fourth seat of the fifth row for playing one wrong note! But then when Toscanini appeared on stage before the bright lights with the grand orchestra before him, when together master and musicians captivated their audience with the heavenly sounds they created — who stopped to think of the gruelling, vexing hours they had spent with every single note of Beethoven's masterpiece?

We commit a serious error when we are inspired by a musical composition or thrilled by a beautiful painting, an exciting new play, a brilliant novel. We commit a great mistake when we fail to realise the painstaking labour that was necessary to create the brilliance and beauty of any work of art, the many details involved in any job well done.

If you have ever climbed to the summit of a mountain, you can probably remember the breathtaking scene that stretched out before your eyes — the magnificent panorama of earth and sky that you beheld. But unless you went up the easy way on a cable car, you will also remember the hundreds of steps you took to get to the top. Before we reach the big things, we must experience the little things. The detail is very important. The little things really do matter. The smallest atom includes the essential elements of the heavens.

Since I have been telling you about the importance of details, the question naturally arises: What are some of the little things that really matter for our lives? It certainly is true that the greatest artist or musician or writer must be concerned with the little things, the details, of his profession. But if we are not artists, how does the detail affect us personally? I believe we can be concerned about the so-called little things through our Jewish heritage. For as we have already seen in the Torah portion Judaism is concerned with little things, with details. And I think this concern can be divided into three main areas.

First, in the way that we must act in life. As you know, Judaism abounds in detailed laws. In fact there are so many laws that there are actually several terms which are synonymous with the word 'law' itself. Now Judaism's interest in law has given rise to severe criticism, but all the laws and regulations serve the purpose of guidance in life. We are not all experts on living. No single individual has ever been such an expert. Moses and Judah ha-Nasi and Maimonides were all susceptible to mistakes. Think of it this way: If enough people cull their experiences over enough years and write down their ideas as guides for living, the end result in the form of legislation may be worthwhile. Throughout the centuries, Judaism has been a religion of practical living as well as theology. Many of the details are worthwhile, many are worthless. But that does not mean that we should ignore them all. They are deserving of our attention, our understanding, our perusal . . . and perhaps our adherence.

The second area of concern is study or knowledge. The Rabbis of the Talmud formulated principles only after they had thoroughly exhausted every detail involved in a principle. Their foundations were firm. But this is certainly true of any student or scholar, and should apply to anyone who considers himself an intelligent Jew. A very famous scholar of the 19th century, Leopold Zunz, carried out exacting investigations into many detailed areas of Judaism. Some people thought he was devoting his life to meaningless trivia, but those scholars who came after him did not think so. He laid the foundation for future builders. In his own words he said, "An intelligent man will seek knowledge in details before venturing to discourse on great subjects." Incidentally, Zunz was one of the early Reformers. He was a Progressive Jew!

Perhaps the third area of concern is the most important. Judaism is vitally interested in every possible detail of human relations — our personal relations with others.

The first area, the way we should act or behave deals mainly with social relations. But this third area is concerned more with the way one human should relate to another. It is the way to love. Judaism is interested not only in the intricate details of society, but the intimate details of the individual, the unique human being. And we are commanded to love, to understand each human being — at times a most difficult command to follow. A Minister once said, in jokingly defining humanitarianism: "I love mankind; it's just people I can't stand!" How very true this often is!

We give money to a variety of charity organisations; we feed the poor and clothe the naked. We are concerned about nuclear disarmament and international affairs. But how often do we stop to think about the importance, the supreme value of every human being we meet? Even those we think we love — our spouses, our children, our parents, our dearest friends. Do we know everything we can possibly know about them? And if not, do we try to know, do we want to know, do we care to know? Do we really care? Here is a detail of the greatest importance — the detail of that one, unique, valuable, beloved human being.

Erich Fromm, a psychologist, pointed out once "that there is perhaps no greater evidence of Freud's genius than his counsel to take the time even if it should require many years to help one person to achieve freedom and happiness." But we can turn to Judaism for the same value, as the Talmud states: "To him who saves a single life it is accounted as though he had saved all of mankind."

These are some of the little things that matter in Judaism: How to act toward others in our daily living, the details of knowledge that add up to greater insight and understanding of life, our personal relations with others in the intimacy of living.

These are some of the little things that mattered to the writers of the Bible and the Rabbis of the Talmud, because they could not relegate the individual to a transcendent system of philosophic abstraction. They saw that the character of a human being is the result of little actions groomed and polished and nurtured with each passing day. They realised that nothing great and enduring reaches perfection overnight.

One of these Rabbis asked his colleagues: What is the shortest passage in the Bible upon which all the principles of the Torah depend? And his own answer was from the book of Proverbs: "In all thy ways acknowledge God, and He will direct thy paths." In other words, we should behold and experience God in every detail of our lives. The intricate workings of existence are the patterns of God — from the greatest star to the smallest atom. Our principles need not be so abstract, our philosophy so profound, in order to find and know God. We can know Him in our daily living, in everything we do and touch and see.

Nothing in the sight of God is little, nothing is trivial. In the smallest seed there is a future flower. In the smallest human being, there is the image of Humanity. In the smallest act of kindness, there is the plan of Almighty God. Little things do matter so very much. The detail is also divine!

New York Zoological Society, says the New York Herald Tribune. Mr. Blickman was a member of the New York Zoological Society; Patron of Exploration of the Explorers Club; and a member of the Adventurers' Club of New York, and the Shikar-Safari Club, in addition to several business and technical societies.

Surviving are his wife, Mrs. Lillian Blickman; two daughters, Mrs. Samter Horwitz, of Rochester, N. Y.; and Mrs. David L. Yunich, of Scarsdale, N. Y., wife of the president of Bamberger's, in New Jersey; two sons, Bernard Blickman, of New York City; and Newton Blickman, of Pearl River, N. Y.; and three brothers, Emanuel, Harry, and Isador Blickman, all of New York City.

of the project expanded it took more and more time. It involved asking for the loan of art treasures from the Netherlands, France, the United States and, especially, from Israel, where considerable reluctance was at first encountered.

Negotiations continued. Finally, the Israeli Government sent Dr. Penuel P. Kahane, head of its Museum of Antiquities Department. When the show opened, 180 lending institutions were represented. There was a message from Chancellor Adenauer of West Germany and a speech by Dr. Heinrich Lubcke, who succeeded Dr. Heuss as President of West Germany. An overflow crowd of 1,200 attended. Many persons wept.

The first thing a visitor to Recklinghausen sees as he leaves the railroad station is a square building with German and Israeli flags draped down the front. In between is the word "Synagoga," the title of the exhibition, says the New York Times. Inside, the visitor sees the great Old Testament paintings of Rembrandt, borrowed from museums in Amsterdam, Paris and Berlin; Chagall's vivid rabbinical portraits from Venice, Tev Aviv, and Cologne. There are archaeological fragments from the Roman era, illuminated manuscripts, including the Darmstadt Haggadah, or the story of the Exodus, with pages inlaid with gold. There are Torahs, ornamental shields and crowns for the scrolls of the Law, and rare shofars, or ceremonial ram horns.

There is even a board-by-board construction of an eighteenth-century chapel at Horb, near Wurzburg. Lent by the museum at Bamberg, the chapel has been reassembled in a separate hall of the museum, like a built-in place of worship.

The catalogue of the exhibition is an inch thick. But on one wall there is a small exhibit that is not listed. This is a collection of eight photographs. One shows a group of girls being assembled for deportation. Another is of a girl wearing the number 671 and the Star of David. One shows a Berlin synagogue in flames on November 10, 1939. None are "atrocity" photographs of the kind that later came out of the concentration camps, says the New York Times. But there is a generalized view of Bergen-Belsen — one of the worst camps — and the simple inscription "Lest We Forget. . . ."
